	Our old version of LED kitchen cabinet lighting is designed to operate with one watt (W) electrical power and 2 units of LED to archive 70 lumen (lm) for warm white color and 90 lumens for white color. Today, with the new version of LED, it can be operated at substantially lower efficiency compare to old technologies. The best luminous efficacy of an LED so far is about 10% of the theoretical maximum of 853 for “white” light, or about 85 lm / W. These claim to be much cheaper to fabricate and large arrays of them can be deposited on a screen using simple printing methods to create a color graphical display.
